

VISUAL SYSTEM

The visual system captures light from the environment and converts it into electrical signals, which are then interpreted by the brain to produce images, enabling the perception of color, shape, depth, and movement.

